

Carol Drury,

26 Feb 2003

As the weapon systems in the Middle East have evolved since desert storm, are we missing a diplomatic opportunity in the court of domestic and international opinion. The Iraqis claim that they won't destroy their missile system in violation of UN requirements. They claim that when they install their guidance system they are within allowable requirements. My position is that he does not need a guidance system. "If?" he loads these missiles with any sort of chemical or biological warfare agent the Israelis new arrow intercept missile system will do the rest of the work for him. The arrow is more advanced and designed to impact down range at higher altitudes. At the point of impact these agents will be released into the wind currents and get blown where? Another Arab nation, Africa, Europe? What will the wind current effects be? The Middle East and International community has been preconditioned to expect that only Israel will suffer. Science and technology(wind currents) in terms a common man can relate, can resolve any Diplomatic or International impasse to Saddam Hussein if presented properly.

Sincerely,
Robert Yount
1950 Butler Pike #123
Conshohocken PA. 19428
610-397-0860
Concerned American Citizen
Military Special Forces Trained